"I don't think Jesus would join the protesters outside the abortion clinic. I think that he would be accompanying patients inside, caring for them and holding their hands."

This powerful vision is from Rev. Katey Zeh, CEO of Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC). Rev. Zeh is one of the pro-choice Christian leaders (featured in this Newsweek article) fighting to take back control of the narrative on faith and abortion. Conservative anti-abortion Christians have dominated this discourse for decades now, perpetuating the false belief that being Christian means being anti-abortion, poisoning the well, and leveraging their political might to hijack legislation throughout the country and enforce their narrow religious views on everyone else.

It's more important than ever for pro-choice Christians to speak their truth to shatter these myths and promote true religious freedom and pluralism, and more and more folks are doing exactly that.

. . . Folks like Katey, who you can hear more from later today!

She and the rest of the RCRC team will be live at our Zoom community gathering at 4 pm ET today, ready to speak on faith and reproductive freedom and the part RCRC is playing in our post-Roe world.

Please join us!
